SHORT POUNDS OF BUTTER.

The respectful attention of the commercial paper published in the interests of the butchers and grocers of this city is directed to the following statement of facts. Mr. B. J. Beer of this city, last week bought some creamery butter, paying 30 cents per pound for a fancy brand. It was bought at a grocery store, and we presume that the store keeper is a member of the union. On weighing the packages he found they tipped the scales at 13 ounces. An employe of this paper purchased what was supposed to be a pound of butter and it weighed a little more than fourteen ounces. Each of these purchases were made at different stores.

We have noted that Mr. Harrington has been inveighing against goods that are sold with a premium, and that the butchers and grocers and other merchants generally, seem to take kindly to the idea, which may be good or may not, because we do not see any improvement in quality, increase in quantity, or decrease in price since our soap man quit giving us coupons entitling us to a year's subscription to the Woman's Home Companion, or a silver plated sugar spoon. So we direct attention to this matter in the public manner we do in order that Brother Harrington may lay aside his fight on the parcels post and the premium coupon and tackle this matter right at the fountain head.

We also suggest to the purchasing public that when one goes to buy a pound of butter he is entitled to sixteen ounces and should insist on getting it. We further suggest to the food inspector that in his Pegasus like flights from store to store and shop to shop, that the condemnation of impure food is not all the duty he has to attend to. He should weigh up a pound or so of butter occasionally and when he catches grocers selling under weight he should cause the offenders to be snatched before his Honor Christopher Diehl, Jr., judge of the criminal division of the municipal court.

Prices are too high and salaries too low for men to be swindled in this way. If any of the parties interested want further information it is easily obtained.

BILL NYE'S HOME IS SOLD.

"Buck Shoals" Purchased by Carter Harrison's Sister.

The place to which Bill Nye, the humorist, gave the incongruous name of Buck Shoals, which was made famous up to the time of his death several years ago as his wild mountain home, has been sold to Mrs. Sophie Harrison Eastman of Chicago, a sister of Chicago's many-time mayor, Carter H. Harrison, says the Atlanta Constitution. The consideration is not given out, but is understood, though well up in the thousands, to have been less than its value. The estate contains 100 acres and adjoins George W. Vanderbilt's estate, Biltmore, lying ten miles south of Asheville.

The place where Bill Nye did his best work, wrote his funniest poetry, and lived the best of his life, has deteriorated since his death. It has fallen into alien hands and its care has not been so great a matter of interest to the owners since its first owner died. Now, however, it will be entirely renovated in every way that money can do so, as Mrs. Eastman intends to make it her summer home if not for the entire year. She will immediately take possession of the fine old residence as soon as some necessary changes have been made upon it. Buck Shoals is considered one of the finest of North Carolina's mountain homes.

Flypaper Checks Cut Worms.

Do It Again.

The paper was fresh from the press—
The neatest I ever have seen;
A marvel of printing, no less,
All errorless, type-whole, and clean.
So, heaving a sigh of relief,
I halted my hurrying pen;
Abrupt came the voice of my Chief,
"That's good. Go and do it again!"

O, daub it, or scribble, or till,
Or build, as it seems to you best,
And look for reward where you will,
But dream not fruition means rest;
For, sing the most glorious lays,
Or drain the most pestilent fen,
The Voice, e'er it ceases to praise,
Will bid you, "Go, do it again!"

Old laurels must wither and fall;
Win others, and never demur—
That, longing for manger and stall,
Your lot is the lash and the spur.
When Gabriel blows from the skies
Awakening the ashes of men,
The Worker shall hear as they rise,
"Well done! Do it over again!"
—Arthur Guiterman, in New York Times.

MALE TOADS HATCH EGGS.

Reversal of Natural Proceedings in Some Species.

In the animal kingdom more than one species divides the labor of incubation, but several species of toads are known in which the care of the eggs devolve upon the males.

The Chilian or Darwin's frog is one of these, the male being provided with a large pouch covering the entire under part of the body. It has two openings into the mouth and the eggs are swallowed into this curious receptacle, where they remain until the tadpoles are ready to begin an individual existence.

The female has no pouch and once the eggs are laid takes no further interest in her offspring, leaving the entire care of the family to the devoted father.

Another species has an equally curious mode of caring for the egg, the male wrapping the strings of new-laid eggs about his hind legs and retiring to the seclusion of some handy hole until the advent of the tadpoles releases him from his confinement.

The Surinam toads do not pass through the tadpole stage, but make their appearance as full-fledged toads. In this case they are under their mother's care, the male assisting her to place the eggs one by one into the hexagonal cells upon her back, where they are carried safely through incubation.
